

WHAT IS BIOLOGY DISSERTATION?

A biology dissertation is a piece of writing created to show how well a candidate can research, record, analyze, and present the results of a biological investigation. The final report, or dissertation, must be well-written and logical, with all claims supported by reliable data from the author's own research or by citations to further, peer-reviewed academic publications.

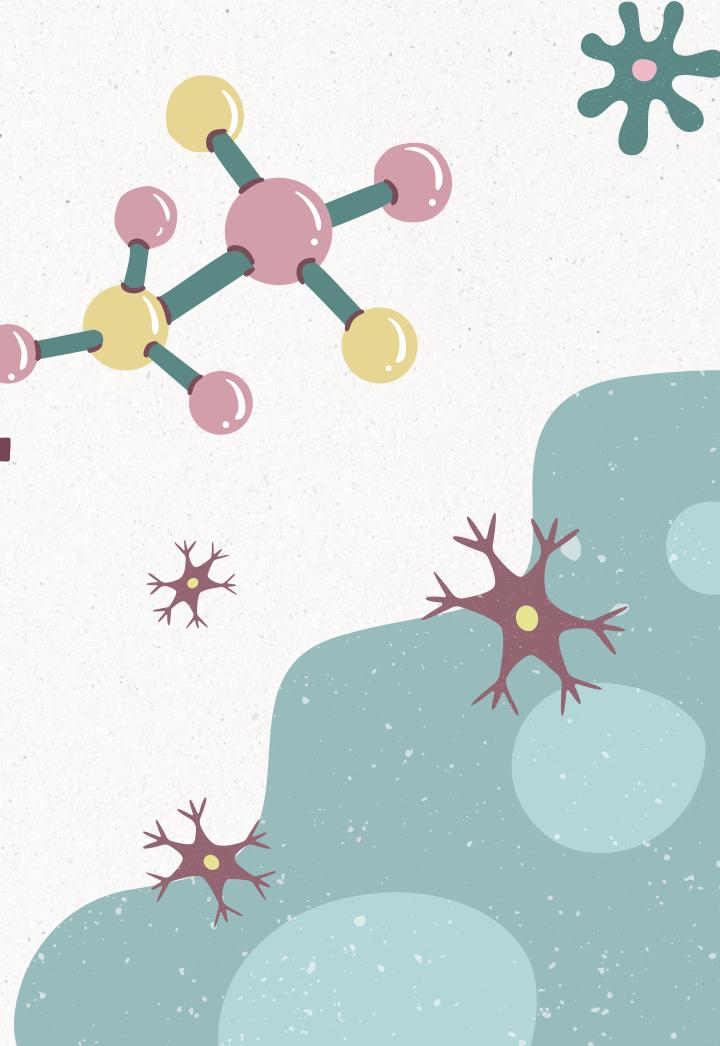

Typically, biology dissertations are organized under the following headings into multiple chapters:

- Introduction
- Research Review
- Methodology
- Results
- Discussion
